Final Stand-Up Comedy Script

Stand-Up Comedy Set: "College - The Greatest Scam of All Time"

Hey everyone! So I'm in college... which basically means I'm poor, confused, and permanently tired.

Let's start with online classes- the modern way of saying "Let's all pretend we're learning."

I wake up at 8:59 for my 9:00 AM class, open the laptop, and stare at the screen like I'm decoding alien signals.

The professor? Definitely a hologram. And if you keep your mic off and camera off long enough, you start wondering if **you** even exist.

Then there's group assignments.

Ah yes-where "group" means you, and "assignment" means suffering.

You do 100% of the work, while the other three people in the WhatsApp group send motivational messages like, "Let's get this done, bro"... and then disappear.

And let's not forget hostel food.

It's like a toxic relationship. You know it's bad. It smells off.

But you're hungry and broke, so you go back. Again. And again. Until your stomach files for divorce.

College teaches you many life lessons. Like how to budget your life with 23 rupees in your account.

"Should I eat lunch... or save this money for emotional damage snacks during exam week?"

Speaking of exams-they're amazing.

That magical week when you try to read 5 months of notes in 5 hours...

and somehow still have time to cry, pray, and scroll Instagram for "inspiration."

College life is honestly just a reality show-

Bad food, weird characters, plot holes, constant drama, and every episode ends with you thinking, "I should've dropped out in Season 1."

But hey, at least we're surviving. Barely.

And if nothing else, I've mastered the art of looking awake with my eyes closed.

Thank you, and if any of my professors are watching this-this was all fiction.

Especially the part about me skipping class. I'm always there. In spirit. Mostly.
